[THE ARMS OF SIR JOHN FIELD.]

GENEALOGY.

THE FIELD FAMILY

GENEALOGY

OF THE

[The Arms of Field's Ancestry]

PROVIDENCE:

J. A. & R. A. REID, Printers.

After a careful research of the records and other sources of information in the towns of Providence, Cranston, Johnston, Warwick, Scituate, Gloucester, Cumberland and Smithfield of Rhode Island, and of Plymouth and Salem, of Massachusetts, I have compiled the following record of the families of William and John Field first of Providence. I think I can safely claim that as far as they go they are correct.

I have to acknowledge the invaluable assistance of Mr. George T. Paine, of Providence, in the revision of my work, than whom no more competent authority probably can be found in the State on any question of genealogy, he having made it a special study.

For the better understanding of some of the parties interested in these records, and who are unaccustomed to this method of numbering in the record, I would say that the figures on the margin number the heads of families, and the central figures number each individual from the first down.

I would also explain that with each distinct branch, except that of James Field, I have commenced back at the first progenitor, which will account for some repetition.

The James Field record commences at No. 16 on the John Field record, and then is traced by itself, he being a direct descendant of John Field and brother of Deacon John No. 15.

There are several families of Fields in this city that are not descended from the first settlers of that name. The family of Rev. Samuel J. Field are descendants of Darby Field, the first white man that ascended the White Mountains and who settled in New Hampshire.

Mr. James H. Field, who descended from the Massachusetts Fields, migrated here from Boston Highlands. Mr. Silas M. Field, son of Robert, who resided in Carmel, Maine, tells me that he was informed by the late Daniel Field of this city — of two generations back, — that a brother of the first John Field settled in Maine, and doubtless was his progenitor.

H. A. B.

INTRODUCTION.

It is said by the genealogist of the family of Zachariah Field, who first settled in Dorchester, Mass., that "the first individuals of the name of Field — William and John — that settled in Providence, emigrated to this country in 1632." No record of this family is to be found in Rhode Island earlier than 1636. At that time we find the name of William Ffeild, Ffeild or Ffield, and a year later that of John Ffeild, Ffeild or Ffield on the public records of Providence.

The name of Robert Field occurs as an inhabitant of Newport in 1638. He afterwards settled in Flushing, L. I. William Field signed the "compact" in 1636. John Field swore allegiance in 1637.

Both William and John Field were in public life after this date; both were employed in the transaction of the business of the Colonies; both were appointed members of a committee for arranging and establishing a "General Court" at Newport, R. I., in 1646.

It is a question much mooted among interested parties at the present time whether these men, William and John Field, were related. It is a tradition in the family of Thomas Field, nephew and heir of William, that William Field came from Snowden, in Wales. I find no proof of it. It is believed by the various genealogists of different families of Field in the United States that these men were brothers. It is stated by Henry M. Field, the genealogist of the family of his father, David Dudley Field, D. D., of Stockbridge, Mass., that "a few years after the arrival of his ancestor, Zachariah Field, who settled in Dorchester, Mass., two brothers, William and John Field, appeared at Providence, from whom are descended the large number of Fields in the State of Rhode Island." It is the opinion of others that they were the descendants of Sir John Field, the astronomer. Sir John disinherited one or more of his sons, on account of their political and puritanic principles, and it is believed they fled to Holland with the Puritans, and when embarking for this country came through Wales, and were registered there. Osgood Field, a distinguished genealogist, formerly of New York, now of London, England, a descendant of Robert Field, of Flushing, L. I., who was a descendant of Sir John Field, expresses great confidence in the opinion, and offers some strong reasons to confirm it, that William and John were brothers, and descendants of Sir John Field sons of William Field, a son of Sir John.

A careful investigation of the records of Plymouth and Salem throw no light on this subject. Neither is there any evidence that either of them attempted a settlement in either town. On the records of Providence are recorded some business transactions between William and John, among others the transfer of valuable property, where no money is mentioned as compensation, but "valuable considerations already received" is mentioned instead. This and some other considerations indicate more than a mere friendly interest between the parties, but no relationship is mentioned. Myron Barr Field, of New York, thus traces the genealogy of William Field. "He was the son of William Field, born 1571, who was son of Sir John Field, who died in 1587, who was the son of Richard Field, who died 1542, who was grand-son of William, who died 1480." Osgood Field in his book of genealogy says of Sir John Field, "that he descended from and used the same 'arms' of the family of Hubertus de la Feld, who went to England with William the Conqueror; and who traced his family back to the Chateau de la Feld, near Colmar in Alsatia, in France, where the counts of that name had been seated for centuries — so early as the darkest period that succeeded the fall of the Roman Empire." He also states that "in addition to the original arms of this ancient family of the West Riding of Yorkshire — 'Sable a chevron between three garbs argent' — was granted to Sir John Field in recognition of his services to science." "A dexter arm issuing out of clouds, proper, plessways, habited Gules, holding in the hand also proper a sphere Or." He also states that the prefix 'de la' was dropped at the time of the war between England and France, as unpopular. He traces on the records of Bradford and other places the gradual change of the name from Ffeld to Field, in the transfer of the same property, in the course of time. He also alludes to the fact that some of the property that belonged to that ancient family is called "Field's court" at the present time.

There is a remarkable recurrence of the same names among the descendants of the families of Thomas and John Field, that prevailed in the family of Sir John and his ancestors. The names William, Thomas, Richard, John, James, Jeremiah, Zachariah, and Daniel are in every generation.

Personal resemblance and traits of character are still traceable in some of the older members of both families; strongly marked features, keen blue eyes, and sandy or brown hair characterized the earlier families. Stern integrity of purpose, stubborn wills, fierce tempers and indomitable independence prevailed in both as a class, exhibiting the antecedents of a haughty race unaccustomed to servility.

The homestead of John Field was situated on the "western side of the salt water," in the neighborhood of "Cowpen Point." Besides large tracts of land in Cranston and Smithfield, he also owned the tract alluded to, as devised by William Field in 1661 "for valuable considerations already received." It was described as being situated on "Waubossett Plains," "the path to Mashapaug running through it,"—now Broad, Weybosset and Greenwich streets. According to Rev. E. M. Stone, of the Rhode Island Historical Society, the house lot of William Field consisted of eight acres of land, fronting on what is now South Main street, extending from Hopkins to Planet street. The house stood where the Old Providence Bank now stands, and the house of his nephew and heir, Thomas Field, stood where the Providence Institution for Savings now stands. He also states that "William Field's house was one of the three that was barricaded at the time the Indians burnt the city." William Field bought out the rights of two of the original owners of "proprietary rights," the rights of Thomas, James and Francis Weston; and his landed possessions were large, extending into Cranston, Warwick, Johnston, Scituate, Gloucester and Smithfield. Eight hundred acres of land adjacent to "Field's Point," (that bears his name) was included in his possessions, and it was the homestead of later generations.

Leaving biographical notices to abler pens, I will simply say that much of interest might be said of many individuals in both families. The second John Field, of Providence, who settled in Bridgewater and was called "Capt. John Field of Bridgewater," was conspicuous in his day for his public services, wealth and social position. His great-grandson, Dea. John Field, 4th, of Providence, was also one of the most noted men of his time, for his enterprise, piety and benevolence, his large possessions making some of his descendants rich, even at the present day. There are many of the descendants of Zachariah Field, 2d son of the first John Field, of Providence, that our city is justly proud of, for their culture, social position, enterprise and wealth. Many of them are among our leading men.

Most of the descendants of Thomas Field, the nephew and heir of the first William Field, settled in other States, where they and some of their descendants have left an honorable record. The sons of Capt. William Field, of Fields Point, were all of them noted men. A person that was familiar with the society of their day, said of them: "No young men in the State were more 'looked up to' than Abner and Nehemiah Field." They both held commissions in the Continental Army before they were twenty-one years old, and were present at the battle of Bunker Hill. They were leading men in public and private life in the towns where they settled, and some of their descendants are among the most enterprising Western men. "Hon. George Field, of Cranston," the youngest son of Captain William, held a high social position, and was noted for his moral and social qualities. He was always in public life. His stern sense of right, and his unyielding integrity, his stately and dignified bearing, caused him occasionally to be alluded to as an "Old Roman Senator." One of our orators, in describing the Rhode Island Assembly of other days, alluded to "George Field, the Cato of the Senate." His heart and hand was ever open to the distressed, and his counsel was sought by all ranks in life.

People of all stations, parties and creeds attended his funeral, and the Town Council of Cranston adjourned their meeting in order to be present. Various others equally worthy of mention I might notice if space would admit.
